

Renée Heywood has been an educator for over 25 years, beginning as a Spanish teacher teaching kids from pre-school age through adults at the Wheelock Graduate School of Social Work. The last 11 years, she has been an administrator doing equity and juvenile justice work at the Department of Youth Services. Three years ago, she was appointed by the Commonwealth of MA as the Director of Educational Services overseeing educational programming for all incarcerated youth. She has traveled the world to support young people in music and education in places like Guatemala, Nicaragua and Australia. She is an internationally published writer on education and has written a book on marriage with her husband entitled, "I Said, I do to All That? Unpacking Life's Baggage." She has her bachelor's in Spanish Language & Literature from Brandeis University, her master's in Educational Leadership from Bridgewater State and is in the final stages of her Ph.D. at UMass Amherst after being the College of Education Graduate School Fellow. Her concentration is Language, Literacy and Culture with a focus on racial and equity issues in education.